Reflections of Training (if applicable)

How would you define your role within the young person’s life?

What are your fears or reservations about being a host?

If spirituality is an important aspect of your life, how is it expressed?

Since our 1st interview have you thought anymore about what expectations or “rules” have you for the young person around the house-communication etc?

Have you considered what your boundaries or limits would be?

What would you consider to be a successful hosting experience?

If you could know something about the young person before you met them- what would you want to know?
Scenarios:

(If Coupled) Your partner (wife/husband) is developing a much closer relationship to the youth than your relationship to the youth. It starts to bother you. What do you do?

When the youth moved in- she stated school was her priority and it’s her goal to finish high school. Over a month’s time you notice she has been home often during the day and seems to never be working on any homework. When you ask her about school she always says it’s going well. You notice you are starting to mistrust the information the youth is giving you. What do you do?

You haven’t seen the young person in 10 days. You have had a few texts and know he is okay. All of the groceries you bought for him are now going bad. What do you do?

You have met your youth’s girlfriend. You like her. She spends a lot of time at the house. You have asked that there be no overnights. You suspect your youth is sneaking the girlfriend in the house. Your neighbor confirms your suspicion in asking you about a vehicle he has seen in the middle of the night near your home. What do you do?
